

Appendix 3: Final Interview with Client

- ME: Hey dad, I've finished the project, and I was wondering if you could look over it.
- DAD: Sure thing. Give me some time to look through it though.
- ~Checks through the program~
- DAD: I'm glad you changed the task title from one of those text boxes to this drop down menu. We'll be able to use it a lot more quickly now, since we only really care about those four things.
- ME: Great! Anything else?
- DAD: Yes, one more small problem. In the details pane, you display the average cost, sales price, revenue, and profit without showing the actual dollar sign. It's hard to read... do you think you could change this?
- ME: Yeah, I can definitely fix that. Java has something called a Number Formatter that allows number to be formatted like an excel worksheet. It'll look a lot more like an excel accounting book afterwards. Is that how you want it to be.
- DAD: Perfect.
- ME: Awesome, I'll make sure to do that. It shouldn't take long to implement that alteration. Is there anything else?
- DAD: No, it looks amazing! Thank you so much for making this project for me, I really think it will help out my coworkers and me. Thank you so much.
- ME: No problem. Glad I was able to program something useful.
